Creating a Sacred Space

Have you ever wished that you could shut out the outsideworld due to overwhelm?
Do you often feel disconnected from yourself?
Would you consider reigniting your sense of self in a safe sacred space?

If there's one thing the past 13 months have revealed it's the importance of feeling safe and secure. There've been many moments from the external world of extremity and pendulum swinging emotions; also reflected within our daily life and personal experience. We are intrinsically linked from our inner world to the outer, therefore anything we feel, sense and see is part of a duality that exists in the human experience.

Meditation is a portal; a way for us to connect to our internal state, however we are in any given moment.

Meditation is accessible and do-able for everyone! It is a practical, soulful tool to open up and connect to our internal world allowing for a sense of grounding, presence and stillness; creating a sacred space within.

Managing your Sacred Space

Meditation is not all about emptying the mind; the mind is always active, quite often narrating, guiding and directing our internal talk, most of which is contained within our belief systems. Meditation can calm and quiet the mind by becoming the observer of our thoughts, rather than sucked into the drama and ensuing emotions that lead to overwhelm, anxiety, worry, fear, anger, frustration.

As the world spins on its axis, we can experience our own rhythm and nature, receive inner wisdom and be guided soulfully by our inner community, our hearts and true self.

The Meditations

I present to you an offering of three meditations which will introduce you to connecting with your internal world and create your own safe sacred space.

Each meditation is around 10 minutes long, fully guided, space held and opportunity for reflections afterwards. Beginning with creating your sacred space, exploring introspection and receiving, these themes have been crafted to open up and hold a space for you to lean into and be supported in your inward journey.

Even if meditation is new to you, or you've been meditating for many years, each and every experience is unique; allowing for something new to arise within. An opportunity to lay a foundation, build upon existing ones and empower yourself to hold a strong unity and fortress within.

The Meditations

Before listening to these guided meditations, I invite you to spend 2-5 minutes in a meditative posture (sitting, or laying down) and see what sort of questions arise from this gentle experience. Allow your mind to be free and honour what comes.

After each meditation, sitting for some moments in reflection is recommended. Having a pen and paper handy to record your thoughts, feelings and experiences invites the experience to be fully realised. It can also allow things to arise you didn't know were there!
